CB,

Thank you for thinking about alternative ways to skin this cat. But I don't think we should look at this right now for at least two reasons. First, the state already has EMs appointed in five cities and four school districts. I wouldn't want it to seem like I have a special deal. Second, in thinking about the EM position I went back and looked at the SIGTARP legislation and the federal law authorizing the creation of the D.C. Control Board in 95. Both gave those managers tremendous powers, but neither was subject to questions about the authority of the Congress to enact them and the President's authority to sign them into law. By contrast Michigan's new EM law is a clear end-around the prior initiative that was rejected by the voters in November. The new EM law gives local governments four choices to fix their financial emergency:

Consent Agreement, in which local leaders remain in charge but must meet certain conditions in an agreement negotiated with the state (Detroit is already under a CA and it sounds like it's not working);
A state appointed EM that has broad authority over local finances;
Chapter 9 bankruptcy with the Governor's approval; and
Mediation, in which the local government and interested parties meet with a neutral party to resolve financial issues, such as employee contracts (this is essentially required to file a Chapter 9 petition).

So although the new law provides the thin veneer of a revision it is essentially a redo of the prior rejected law and appears to merely adopt the conditions necessary for a chapter 9 filing. The news reports state that opponents of the prior law are already lining up to challenge this law.

Nonetheless, I'm going to speak with Baird in a few minutes to see what his thinking is. I'll let you know how it turns out. Thanks.
